Even travel-size bottles of shampoo and conditioner aren't impervious to spills and leaks. It's Beauty-id to the rescue with a modern and convenient way to take care of your hair while you travel.

Beauty-id is a novel hair-care treatment featuring single-dose applications. The individual, heat-sealed packets contain shampoo, conditioner, and treatments enriched with vitamins, herbs, and other good-for-your-hair nourishments such as shea butter and olive oil.

The hermetically sealed, easy-to-open packets come in a full-size "jewel box" dispenser for everyday use, or in a handy accordion-style folder for ease of packing.

Beauty-id is the creation of Claudie and Rino Jasper, native Texans who worked in Paris as hair stylists for couturiers such as Yves Saint Laurent, as well as top fashion magazines. Beauty-id can be found at Nordstrom's, specialty boutiques, or by going online to beautyideas.com.

Fashionable Movement

The athletic-shoe company Puma has created a number of successful partnerships with athletes, artists, and designers for the launch of chic lines like the minimalist footwear collection by Philippe Starck and a sport-fashion apparel line designed by Neil Barrett. For nuala (an acronym that stands for Natural, Universal, Altruistic, Limitless, Authentic), the folks at Puma team up with supermodel/entrepreneur Christy Turlington for a lifestyle collection that merges her interest in eastern practices with her experience in the fashion industry.

Turlington, who studied religion and philosophy at New York University, says the line was inspired from her personal experience of having to go from yoga, to meetings, to classes, and to dinner. "The reality of today's woman is that she constantly has to balance all aspects of her life," Turlington explains, "be they family or work or personal wellness. Nuala helps her transi-
